Global Securitization Organizations Offer Immediate, Coordinated Industry Response to the Market Crisis

Identifies Problems, Offers Recommendations, Highlights Importance of Securitization

December 3, 2008, New York, NY, London and Sydney—The Global Joint Initiative to Restore Confidence in the Securitization Markets, including representatives from the global securitization industry, today identified the multiple factors which contributed to the current market crisis, presented the near- and medium-term market outlook and outlined the significant threat to global economic growth if the securitization sector does not recover. In addition, the industry prioritized the areas of focus for the industry response which are likely to have the greatest near-term impact, and offered recommendations to enhance and standardize industry practices in the securitization and structured credit markets. The recommendations were issued by the Securities Industry and Financial Markets Association (SIFMA), the American Securitization Forum (ASF), the European Securitisation Forum (ESF) and the Australian Securitisation Forum (AuSF).

“The global securitization industry is firmly committed to developing and implementing practical, action-oriented solutions to restore confidence in the securitization markets,” said Tim Ryan, president and CEO of the Securities Industry and Financial Markets Association.

“The recommendations offered today have global reach and impact and are important steps to develop best practices and improve market infrastructure. Taken together with government-led initiatives in the US, Europe and Australia to encourage securitization, we hope this will help restart the frozen credit markets.”

The industry groups identified multiple factors as contributing to the current crisis, noting that many of the factors which contributed to the rapid growth in securitization and structured credit over the last several years also left the market particularly vulnerable to any misstep. These factors also contributed to the severity of the crisis and the speed with which the securitization and broader credit markets deteriorated.

At the same time, the industry notes the importance of securitization to the global economy and the importance of its recovery. Market conditions are expected to remain difficult through 2010, which puts at risk the benefits of securitization such as reduced cost and availability of credit and reduces alternatives for investors. Globally, Banks may fail to meet $2 trillion of demand for credit origination over the next three years in the absence of well-functioning securitization markets.

“Securitization is an essential source of funding for consumer and business credit throughout the world,” said George Miller, executive director of the American Securitization Forum. “It has served as an engine of economic growth for forty years. There will be a significant impact on the availability and cost of credit and, more broadly, the global economy if functionality is not restored in this important sector. While not a cure-all, the steps we present are the key steps to rebuild confidence and improve the securitization market infrastructure.”

The industry groups note that there is no single action or combination of actions the industry can take which will be sufficient to restore the securitization market to a more normal level of functionality, let alone restore it to the level of the last few years. The groups also caution against using the volumes of 2006 and early 2007 as benchmarks for success in returning the markets to health.

Whilst the level of application to geographic areas varies, the Global Joint Initiative has identified 4 priorities for immediate action by the industry. These are: 1) improve disclosure of information on underlying assets for residential mortgage-backed securities; 2) enhance transparency with regard to underwriting and origination practices; 3) restore the credibility of CRAs; and 4) improve confidence in valuations, methodologies and assumptions.

“The speed with which securitization returns and the form it takes are dependent on several factors, many of which are beyond the industry’s control,” said Rick Watson, managing director of the European Securitisation Forum. “Global macroeconomic factors are weighing on the market’s recovery. These recommendations, however, are focused on actions the industry can take immediately or that build on efforts which are already underway to foster market recovery.”

Finally, the Global Joint Initiative offers the following eight recommendations for restoring confidence in the securitization markets:

1. Increase and enhance initial and on-going pool information on RMBS into a more easily accessible and more standardized format.
2. Establish core industry-wide market standards of due diligence disclosure and quality assurance practices for RMBS.
3. Strengthen and standardize core representations and warranties as well as repurchase procedures for RMBS.
4. Develop industry-wide standard norms for RMBS servicing duties and evaluating servicer performance.
5. Expand and improve independent, third-party sources of valuations and improve the valuation infrastructure and contribution process for specified types of securitization and structured products.
6. Restore market confidence in the CRAs by enhancing transparency into the CRA process.
7. Establish a Global Securitization Markets Group to report publicly on the state of the market and changes in market practices.
8. Establish and enhance educational programs aimed at directors and executives with oversight over securitized and structured credit groups, as well as at investors with significant exposure to these products.

Working groups of the four industry associations are aligned with every recommendation and several of the recommendations are already being addressed through industry efforts such as ASF Project RESTART, the global SIFMA Credit Rating Agency Task Force, the ESF RMBS Issuer Transparency Principles Project and the AuSF Transparency Task Force. Next steps on a variety of projects have been identified vis a vis the recommendations as well.

Executive Director of the Australian Securitisation Forum, Greg Medcraft, said “The report and recommendations come as Australia’s securitization industry continues to struggle with a lack of investor confidence and stifled demand for securitized assets, which has severely curtailed competition across bank and non-bank mortgage providers. These global initiatives would build on initial steps by the Australian federal government to kick start the local residential mortgage back securities market through its A$8 billion in funding for RMBS over the coming year.”

“We all recognize the pressing need for the industry to take the lead in immediately implementing the recommendations to begin to restore confidence in the securitization markets,” said Medcraft. “There is clearly an urgent need for a global, coordinated industry effort to address the current crisis. While the total solution will involve factors and efforts beyond ours, the industry is dedicated to working on the elements it can control to restore the smooth functioning of the global securitization markets.”

Please Note: The industry groups will jointly host a seminar on “Restoring Confidence in the Securitization Markets: A Global Initiative” on Wednesday, December 3, 2008 in New York City, in London and via webinar. The seminar begins at 8:00 a.m. ET/1:00 p.m. GMT. To RSVP, please contact Haley Mustac, (212) 313-1256, hmustac@sifma.org.
